Milo spent his days wandering the streets, his heart heavy with loneliness. He watched the other puppies playing and frolicking, their laughter filling the air. But whenever he tried to join in, they would bark at him and run away.

One gloomy afternoon, as Milo sat on the curb feeling utterly alone, he noticed a little girl sitting on the steps of the library. She was reading a book and seemed completely engrossed in her own little world.

Hesitantly, Milo approached the girl. "Excuse me," he said softly. "Would you like to be my friend?"

The girl looked up, her eyes widening in surprise. "A friend?" she asked. "But why would you want to be friends with me?"

"Because I'm lonely," Milo replied. "I don't have any other friends to play with."

The girl smiled gently. "My name is Lily," she said. "And I'd love to be your friend, Milo."

And so, Milo and Lily became the best of friends. They spent their days exploring the town together, playing in the park, and sharing secrets. Milo had finally found the companionship he had always longed for.

But their friendship was put to the test when Lily's family had to move away. Milo was heartbroken at the thought of losing his best friend.

Lily understood Milo's sadness. "Don't worry," she said. "We'll always be friends, no matter how far apart we are."

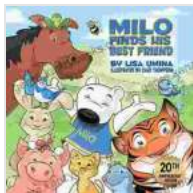

And so, Milo and Lily continued to write to each other, sharing their adventures and dreams. And though they lived far apart, their friendship only grew stronger over time.
