The Freedom Riders

The Freedom Riders were a group of about 400 young people, both black and white, who traveled to Mississippi in the summer of 1964 to challenge the state's segregation laws. They rode on buses and trains, and they sat in whites-only restaurants and hotels.

The Freedom Riders faced violence and intimidation from white supremacists. They were beaten, arrested, and even murdered. But they refused to give up. They continued to ride, and they inspired others to join the fight for civil rights.

The Impact of the Freedom Riders

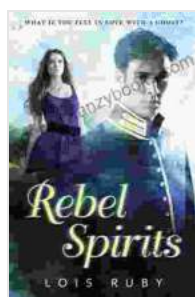

The Freedom Rides were a major turning point in the Civil Rights Movement. They helped to raise awareness of the brutality of segregation and they inspired countless others to join the fight for equality.

The Freedom Riders also helped to desegregate public transportation in the United States. In 1965, the Supreme Court ruled that segregation on buses and trains was unconstitutional. This ruling was a major victory for the Civil Rights Movement, and it would not have been possible without the courage of the Freedom Riders.
